

Convenience or part of a campaign? Governor Scott Walker denies that he's using state resources to help him fight off a recall campaign. He defends his new website that claims savings around the state thanks to the collective bargaining changes for public employees he ushered into place in the spring. It's info people have been asking for, he says

Walker, speaking with Mitch Reynolds (on WIZM's La Crosse Talk PM last night), calls those who attack the website, 'cynics.' State democrats say they'll file a complaint with the state elections board over the website.
