

The Governor's approval rating is slipping while the numbers of folks supporting a recall against him are on the rise. That's according to the latest Wisconsin Public Radio/St. Norbert College Survey. It shows that 58 percent of respondents believe Walker should be recalled from office. That compares with 47 percent who said in April that Walker should be recalled. Senate Democrat Kathleen Vinehout says while the recall goes on...she says those that represent in Madison must go forward in their day to day jobs.

Walker's approval ratings are also low, with 58 percent saying they disapprove of the job he's doing. That's down from 48 percent in the spring. The survey of 482 Wisconsin residents was done between November 1st and last Thursday. It has a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.
