

Allegations of a cover up at Penn State, where football assistant Jerry Sandusky was allegedly found to have molested boys in the 1990's, has the entire UW System taking a look at their policies. UW-Lacrosse Chancellor Joe Gow says Wisconsin will conduct what's called a risk management review, to make sure that all university facilities are safe places for children.

Gow says the review should be finished by April or May. Any proposals for changes will go to the Board of Regents by June. Regents' audit committee chairman Michael Falbo says the review is the top priority at the moment in the wake of the Penn State scandal.
