

Bill Feehan's got a pretty dim view of the whole petition drive to recall governor Scott Walker. First, says the chair of La Crosse county Republicans, it's clear there's people who are signing petitions multiple times, calling the new claim that organizers have reached the half million mark in petitions a pretty dubious one.....

Feehan is referencing election regulators' admission that, although they would flag unusual names on petitions, it would be up to challengers to prove their lack of validity. But Feehan also believes that, even if recall organizers aren't quite there yet, they will be able to collect the required signatures to force a recall election sometime next year. Partially why the party is planning a re-opening of its La Crosse headquarter for early next month.
