

Bike Signs to be Thinned Out

Thursday, 16 February 2012 13:20

Up to three quarters of the new Share the Road with Bicycle signs could be taken down from a couple of streets in La Crosse. City traffic engineer Matt Gallagher blames a lack of communication on the apparent extreme level of signage along Main street and 16th street in the city. Several days ago, big safety yellow signs were installed on both side of those streets, one per block. The signs show the silhouette of a bicycle and the words, "Share the Road." Some of the signs will be left in place and others are set to be added to La Crosse, seventh, Pine and Badger streets. Others will be placed up Bliss road to the top of Grandad Bluff.
