

Wanted Illinois Man Smokes Last Bit of Crack Before Jail

When you know you're going to jail, what's the last piece of business you take care of? A 33 year-old guy that La Crosse cops picked up this week-end has his priorities straight. Police say they stopped the car that David Wims was in after it rolled through a red light on Saturday. While they were looking up his information and determining that he was wanted in Illinois, Wims lit up his crack pipe while sitting in the car. Told cops since he was going to jail, he was darn well going to smoke his crack, or words to that effect. An officer had to take the crack pipe away. After removing an infant from the back seat to search the car for more drugs, they cuffed Wims and hauled him to jail.
