

Onalaska Schools Preparing for New Referendum

Monday, 19 April 2010 10:25

In Onalaska, another trip to the well to fill up school coffers. The school district has started the process of putting together a new referendum. Kind of like the one that the district got approved by voters a few years ago. The same one that's getting ready to expire, says

Onalaska superintendent John Burnett. A referendum that would go to the polls next February likely would ask voters for an extra $1.3 million a year.