

La Crosse's mayor says he wouldn't do it again...

Matt Harter tells reporters that in the future, he will avoid taking part in meetings affecting his family's waste disposal business.

Harter's comments come after a law firm concluded that he violated city ethics by meeting with the county solid waste director, and bringing his father to the meeting. He says the ethics board, the district attorney, and the state justice department to review the situation and give advice on how to avoid problems again.
