

The National Football League threw a flag today on U-S Senator Russ Feingold's campaign, telling it to stop showing a T-V ad that includes N-F-L game footage.

In the ad, Feingold said his Republican opponent Ron Johnson and special interests are quote, "dancing in the end zone, because they think they're going to take down the U-S Senator who has been named the number-one enemy of Washington lobbyists." The ad shows football players dancing in the end zone. The only recognizable N-F-L footage shows Randy Moss "mooning" the Green Bay crowd in a 2005 playoff game.

League spokesman Greg Aiello said Feingold's camp did not get a license to use the footage – and it contacted the campaign about removing it.
