

Money Approved for Bliss Evaluation

No matter what the La Crosse city council decides, you're still not going to get that picturesque drive in on Bliss Road before the end of fall. You might not get it before next Spring. You might never get to take that drive. But the city council has at least given early approval to spending up to 15 thousand bucks to get plans and estimates for fixing the washed out road to Grandad Bluff. The city's public works department says it can't get a good estimate on fixing Bliss without spending some money on it. Next month, council members are likely to discuss a proposal to solicit money from surrounding towns to help pay for the upkeep and repair of Bliss Road.
