

Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker said he will add 250 thousand new jobs and 10 thousand new businesses in four years. Democrats in the state don't think he is even close to adding a single job yet. But republicans in the state say bills including tax credits and a sweeping proposal to give businesses new protections from lawsuits is adding them as we speak.

Department of Administration Secretary Mike Huebsch says a new approach is being taken. He says the governor is moving in the direction of providing an environment where people want to create jobs and grow and build here.

State republicans say they want they want to help businesses grow and expand.....and they will. Democrats are keeping a watchful eye in Madison.
