It's not a done deal yet. But very nearly. The Holmen village board has gotten close enough to working agreements on seven pieces of property where a new library will sit that they're ready to talk about actual location. Village board president Nancy Proctor says the facility is planned for about 9 acres on a swath of land stretching from the southern hand of Halfway Creek Park to Wall street. Final decisions on purchasing property for the new library are likely to be made next month.
