

Rarely do La Crosse police get an honest evaluation from suspected drunk drivers on just how inebriated they are. But, when 48 year-old Wallace Clark failed the field tests they gave him on Friday after a stop, both he and the arresting officer figured the .08 he blew on the breathalyzer had to be wrong. Sure enough, the second try was significantly higher. Clark collected the drunk driving ticket as well as several others for everything from hit and run to having no insurance.
