

In the lobby of Onalaska City Hall, you can see Jason Gilman's name on a plaque listing people who helped plan the new city building more than 10 years ago.

Gilman has worked at City Hall for more than a decade, but now he's been hired by Winona County for a new job there. Onalaska Mayor Mike Giese is sorry to see Gilman leave, but says the city planner deserves to move on to bigger things. Gilman will become the director of Community and Environmental Protection Services in Winona County. That post results from a consolidation of three county agencies.
