

Got that feeling that everyone is earning more money than you? If you're in Wisconsin, comparing yourself to other wage earners around the nation, you could be right. A new report from the Wisconsin Taxpayers Alliance says the average wage in Wisconsin is nearly 14% less than the national average and lower than thirty other states. The state is losing ground, as well; the Alliance says forty years ago, Wisconsin wages were ranked at 22nd in the nation. Pay is lower in almost every industry but especially finance, information, and real estate.
