

Some buildings on the campus of UW-Lacrosse have been hit with hateful and racist graffiti this semester. So far....23 reports have come in. But Chancellor Joe Gow feels that the increase in reports could be largely due to a new website this year that allows UW L students notify campus officials of hateful speech.

He says students can report acts like these through the UW-L website. Gow made a statement to the student body earlier this week and stated that they have no clue as to who is doing the spraypainting and drawings on buildings such as Eagle and Wimberly halls.
