La Crosse will likely be in on the financing of a study to determine whether moving an interstate exit is a good idea. A city council committee has signed off on putting in ten thousand dollars towards the fifty thousand dollar study to consider alternatives for interstate exit 3. The DOT is planning work on the exit and some have questioned whether that might be an opportunity to move the exit in order to create opportunities for development and remove some northside homes from the floodplain. La Crosse county, the city of Onalaska and the La Crosse Area Planning Committee would also help fund the study.
