

Satory Appears to Flip Position on Council Salary

Tuesday, 14 February 2012 11:41

One La Crosse council member appears to have dramatically changed his position on how much he gets paid. Last month, councilman John Satory used low council pay as an argument against adding more workload to a council that would have fewer members.

But, this month, Satory has proposed cutting council pay and term length in half. The move appears to be retribution for the council voting to halve the next mayor's salary if voters approve a city administrator in a spring referendum.