

Lawmakers in Madison might not get around to voting on the pet issue of the state treasurer. Kurt Schuller wants to eliminate his office and that of the Secretary of State. He faces a timing challenge; lawmakers have until the end of the current legislative session next month to vote on the constitutional amendment. But there's also some resistance. Like from the current Secretary of State, Doug La Follette

Legislators have to vote for a constitutional amendment in successive sessions before a measure can go to voters for final approval.
