

When the La Crosse School District brought in an expert on bullying this week, they wanted to hear and share ideas of hwta it will take to curb a problem that has struck school districts every where. And Superintendent, Randy Nelson, says it all starts in cyberspace.

Nelson says the district constantly works to let students know that bullying won't be tolerated and that if they see or hear it happening, to report it.