

A Wisconsin judge last week granted a temporary injunction to groups trying to stop the state's controversial new voter identification law. Dane County Circuit Judge David Flanagan's decision to grant the injunction stops the law from being in effect for the state's April 3rd presidential primary election. And just when things were going so good says La County Clerk, Ginny Denkmeyer.

A Dane County judge is expected to rule today on a possible second injunction barring enforcement of Wisconsin's voter ID requirement.
