

In the last weeks of the recall campaign for governor, job creation has become a pivotal issue. Governor Walker says the state added 24 thousand last year. Fed estimates says the state lost tens of thousands of jobs. But Laura Dresser, with the Center on Wisconsin Strategy says, assuming Walker's numbers are true, that's still not great job growth

Keep your criticism of Walker at a minimum, though. Dresser says the larger world economy has more to do with recovery and job growth in the state than the governor's policies.
