

A few new city lots could be opening up soon on La Crosse's northside. William Kish is asking the city to allow for a new subdivision on Kane street. Kish tells us he's looking at six new lots on the site of, what he thinks is, a former hobo camp at the 900 block of Kane. Utilities are in place and the city has vacated part of Wall Street and a tiny triangle of land to help the process along. Kish says he's added fill to the property and cleared out brush and he's just waiting on city approval of his plans this week. He says the six lots come in different sizes but all meet the city minimum for lot size.
