

There's no pleasing some people. Changes to the clean Energy Jobs Act in Madison aren't enough to satisfy groups like Wisconsin Manufacturers and Commerce. No real surprise for Wisconsin Environment's Dan Kohler. He says WMC has dug its heels in and doesn't seem to want any energy independence solutions. Kohler calls changes made to the Energy bill a good compromise even though the new version leaves out parts that would have gone farther to make Wisconsin more energy independent.