

State public health administrator Karen McKeown says they are still taking public comment on new ways the state wants to combat childhood obesity. It's a 124-page document outlines the best types of physical activities for young people plus ways for adults to make healthy choices for meals.

McKeown says the state's plan will need support from both the public and private sectors in order to succeed.