

More transition for the La Crosse Myrick Hixon Eco-Park. After two years as the park's first permanent executive director, Jeff Su is leaving the Eco-Park for another job. In an October letter to Eco-Park members, Su says he's quitting to take a job in Colorado. Su took over at the Eco-Park in September two years ago with a plan to significantly scale back big dollar plans for an indigenous animal zoo at the park. What emerged later involved essentially no animals but experiential environmental areas intending to educate about different ecosystems. Some parts of what Su envisioned have been constructed since then. Current assistant director June Chromey will take over the job at the park.
