

The La Crosse city council clearly didn't realize that there would be push-back from the public for creating barriers to having open comments at meetings. But there has been

Kathy Connor is one of many who have spoken out against a decision made in September to dump a couple of council meetings and create significant hurdles in front of open public hearings. The council appears likely to revert to the status quo with a vote tomorrow.