

About $64 million dollars' worth of plastics are being buried in Wisconsin landfills each year, when they could be recycled instead. That's according to a new study commissioned by the state DNR. The agency says it will run a pilot project this spring to expand the recycling of flexible film packaging. Nick Nickels, La Crosse County Sustainability Coordinator, agrees with the program.

\(Click for Audio\)

DNR Secretary Cathy Stepp says it would be a win win for both the state's economy and the environment.