

One new building might not be enough for developer Don Weber. Weber says the third Riverside Center building getting started this week will likely be full in a couple of years. Which means a projected shortage if he hits a projected three thousand job mark for Logistics Health in five years. Even though Weber says he's thought about another building in the area, he's not sure where it would go.