

It's a plan to save area trails and land. And it's called the Regional Bluffland Protection Plan. Released by area leaders Wednesday, Ralph Heath with the Outdoor Recreation Alliance explains what it's all about.

\(Click for Audio\)

Heath says research indicates up to 80% of people desire recreational trails close to where they live and play for the health benefits, for tourist dollars, and as a gathering place for families and communities. One reason, he says so many community leaders are on board with the plan.