A rash of burglaries on the southside of La Crosse have police potentially pondering suspects. The latest couple of crimes happened this week-end with reports of a break-in to a houseboat and an accounting business on the far southside near the river. Neighbors have called us to complain about suspected criminal activity in a house on south 13th street and with their frustrations about the apparent lack of police interest in making arrests in the cases. But police appear to be still investigating.
