

It's not just the federal health care exchange that has online problems. Minnesota, with one of the few state run exchanges in the nation, is having its own issues, according to republican state rep, Greg Davids from Preston

\(Click for Audio\)

Davids, who's been a constant critic of federal health care changes, says the state's 153 million dollar MNSure online exchange could have accomplished the same thing with a thirty thousand dollar website. He says news of millions of insurance cancellations prove that the Affordable Care Act has been a disaster for the nation.