One year ago, swine flu was a major health concern in Wisconsin, and around the world...

But now, the pandemic has run its course, according to the World Health Organization. Many government agencies in the U-S stopped keeping count of H-1-N-1 cases, according to La Crosse County health director Doug Mormann, so there's no good estimate on how many people in the county got the illness. Health workers believe the general flu vaccine offered this fall will provide protection against H-1-N-1 as well as the seasonal virus.
