

Battling what he called unlawful executive overreach, Senator Ron Johnson filed suit in federal court last week to overturn the Obama administration's finding that Congress, despite clear statutory language to the contrary, is exempt from a significant portion of ObamaCare. But Johnson was asked if he wins the lawsuit and it's up to the President to enact it.....what happens next.

Johnson was asked why he was suing in court rather than using his powers in Congress to defund Obamacare or have Barack Obama impeached. Johnson believes Congress has exhausted their legislative attempts at defunding and correcting the Affordable Care Act and that is why he is pursuing the lawsuit in the courts.
