A La Crosse police officer has taken his training to another level. Lieutenant Shawn Kudron is just the fourth ever from the department to graduate from the FBI national academy in Quantico, Virginia. The national academy has graduated about 45 thousand cops since 1935. Training at the academy involves a number of graduate and undergraduate courses and admission is highly selective. Kudron and La Crosse police lieutenant Pat Hogan are the only current officers on the force to have graduated from the academy.
