

Jennifer Shilling hasn't announced she's running for state senate. Not yet. But the democratic state rep has done everything but by urging people of the 32nd district to stay tuned for a big announcement on Saturday. Shilling has been rumored to be considering running for the seat against Republican Dan Kapanke in a coming special recall election and many considered her to be the most logical choice to challenge Kapanke because of her name recognition, existing campaign structure, and success at overwhelmingly winning her district. The 32nd senate district is typically pretty evenly divided between democrats and republicans but the just-concluded supreme court race saw the democrat-supported Joanne Kloppenburg winning each county in the district.
