

Despite recent congressional criticism, a La Crosse company is on the right track. That's from Don Weber, CEO of Logistics Health, who says he doesn't agree with the evaluation last month of Nevada freshman congressman Joe Heck, who claims LHI's contracts to get reservists ready for duty actually decrease readiness and increase costs. He says much of that criticism came from a lack of understanding of the contracts LHI has with the military. But Weber also thinks part of Heck's criticism is based on the federal government's slow acceptance of change.
