

Florida, Texas, Idaho, Utah and Arizona. Those states got it. Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin: Not so much. A study on potential for employment growth over the next six years show the first states with the highest rates of growth going forward. Annual gains in employment of over two percent. The IHS Global Insight analysis, however, shows Wisconsin and Minnesota with much more moderate growth of slightly less than one and a half percent over the next six years. And Iowa is lower than that. Less than 20 states have lower growth potential than Wisconsin, according to the study, over the next six years.
