

A decision could be coming soon on when a La Crosse city council meeting might be held to overturn Mayor Matt Harter's latest vetoes. Those trying to call an emergency meeting to vote on override are trying to determine between having the meeting on Monday or Tuesday. Harter vetoed three advisory referendum questions, keeping them from the spring ballot. The council has to overturn by Tuesday in order to get those questions on the ballot. The referendum questions involve billboards and city council size. Among other reasons, Harter says he vetoed the referendum questions because voters have enough to consider with a binding referendum on a city administrator already at the polls.
