The city of La Crosse doesn't know if it's getting a new city administrator. But if voters do approve that change to city government in April, they'll also have a good idea of what will be expected from the mayor's office from now on. This week the city council votes on whether to cut in half the mayor's salary if the city administrator referendum is okayed in the spring

City council president Audrey Kader envisions a half time mayor as performing basically a public relations function for the city.
