

When the 23rd annual MOSES Organic Farming Conference starts Thursday at the La Crosse Center, expect to see several thousand people milling around the downtown area. Center Director, Art Fahey, says this is one the largest events they will host this year...and he has seen it grow in size over the years.

In 1989, about 90 people attended the conference. Last year, over 3 thousand people attended the event. It is the largest organic farming conference in the U.S. organized by the Midwest Organic and Sustainable Education Service.
