

Is there a business that's recession proof? Probably not entirely. But one comes pretty close in Wisconsin, apparently. A new audit from Madison finds the Wisconsin Lottery kept up very solid sales even while the economy was in the tank during the global recession. Auditors actually call the Wisconsin Lottery "recession resistant." While sales dropped slightly in 2009, every other year has seen increases recently with revenues expected to top a half billion dollars this year.