

Have you started swatting at mosquitoes yet this year?

Some people have started seeing the little pests around La Crosse, because of the premature beginning to spring. La Crosse County's chief mosquito watcher, Dave Geske, says the winter weather didn't do much to decrease the numbers of insects.

Mosquito experts generally predict that because we won't get much flooding this spring, the local mosquito population is likely to be low.