

The Farm to School program, which was enhanced in the La Crosse area Tuesday with a new grant, is one that has seen the chopping blocks in state government the past couple of years. State lawmaker, Jennifer Shilling, talks more about a program she has gone to bat for many times.

Farm to School in Wisconsin has been gaining momentum since 2002, with local food served in more than 100 school districts across the state, including several in western Wisconsin.