

Out there on the ice, they're dropping through like... cars and trucks. In the La Crosse area in just the last few days there's been a half dozen vehicles that have taken a plunge into river waters after treading on thin ice. It's been a pretty weird year for that kind of thing, says Bill Yearman, from the DNR. But it's always a few every year

\(Click for Audio\)

Yearman says driving on river ice can be extremely unpredictable because currents and depths of the water can make for dangerous variables.