

Top lawmakers from both parties in Minnesota have said they want to help one of the state's largest private employers, Mayo Health Systems, but many are worried about setting a precedent that other companies and communities would come to expect. Lisa Clark with Mayo says they have quite a bit of government support already.

Mayo representatives testified Thursday that the risk was largely on them, but lawmakers say they are mindful that they could be setting a precedent that other companies and communities would come to expect. The Destination Medical Center proposal flew through the House Jobs and Economic Development Committee.
