

Twelve more months should give them enough information on whether to support frac sand mining...

Houston County commissioners have voted today to continue a ban on sand mining until next March, because they want more time to study the effect of mining on health and public safety. A resolution continuing the moratorium says that the ban could be extended again a year from now, or it could be ended sooner if the county decides to allow mining.