

All Deb Markos of Onalaska needed was a few more feet and she would have finished the Boston Marathon. Then a loud bang.....and she knew what was going on.

Markos says after the second bomb went off...she wandered around looking for her friends. After a quick trip to the hospital for treatment of shock, she was reunited with the party she was running with. Markos, who flies home tonight, says she's grateful to the strangers that helped her through an event she will never forget.
