

A visit to La Crosse this week has shown that a national business group hasn't changed in its opposition to a federal health care overhaul. The National Federation of independent Business is still hoping repeal of Obamacare says the group's manager for house legislative affairs, Kevin Kuhlman. Says the law went after health care reform in a dessert-first way

\(Click for Audio\)

The federation was the lead plaintiff in the landmark case that upheld the constitutionality of the law. That case was decided by the US supreme court last summer.