They got three days of work. but that's all they got. Workers at Skipperliner on French Island. Off the job again after putting in three days to finish up a couple of boats at the bankrupt boatbuilder. Financing fell through on the projects Wednesday night, says court-appointed bankruptcy receiver, James McNeilly. The workers will get paid for the time they put in this week. McNeilly says the receivership has stalled because of a lack of financing to finish projects at Skipperliner.
